CASH OR SPLASH

They need to try to protect their cash during the 7-question game. They have a chance to leave the studio with the remaining cash in their hands if they make it through the final.

STRUCTURE

The first round is played with 5 questions. In this round, each question has 4 possible answers and every possible answer is represented by three trapdoors built in the set.

The contestants have 60 seconds to answer each question. In these 60 seconds, they physically grab their one million in cash and take their positions on top of the trapdoor representing the answer they believe to be correct. If they are not sure of the right answer, each contestant can take a position on a different answer/trapdoor with the amount of money he or she wants. As there are only 3 contestants and 4 possible answers, one of the trap doors will always remain unoccupied.

If the team is certain that they know the correct answer, all three can stand on top of the same trapdoor. Once the decision is made, the contestants await to see the correct answer revealed, holding the cash in their hands.

Once the wrong answers start to be revealed and the trapdoors are opened, the contestant or contestants standing on the incorrect answers fall into the water tanks underneath the trapdoor with the money they have in their hand.

When all the incorrect answers are revealed, if there is a remaining contestant or contestants standing on top of the correct answer/trapdoors, the team earns the chance to continue to the following question, this time with the amount of cash they have saved.

The contestant/s who have fallen will also continue to the next question with their team, but of course, in a very wet state. But the money they had in their hands which has fallen down is now considered lost.

The game is over when the contestants lose all their cash. On the other hand, they get to win all the cash they have been able to save throughout the game at the end of the final round.

CASH OR SPLASH

The second round is played with 1 question, which is the 6th question of the game. In this round, the question will have 3 possible answers.

At this stage, the team nominates one person to act as the team leader. The leader steps aside from the team and waits isolated in a separate location while the remaining team plays the question. The leader cannot see how his or her team is playing the question which is asked, nor hear their voices.

The remaining two contestants, again have 60 seconds to answer the question. They make their decision, grab the remaining cash and take their positions on top of the answers/trapdoors.

Once the team has played the question and are in their positions, the host visits the team leader. The team leader will now be asked to answer the same question. He does not know which possible answers were picked by his team members and which trapdoors they are standing on, as he is positioned in a different part of the studio.

As the same question is asked to the leader, the host asks him to manually open the answers/trapdoors, which he thinks are incorrect.

The team leader starts to open the answers which he believes to be wrong, one by one without seeing what is happening on the set. If there happens to be a member of his team standing on that answer/trapdoor, he, of course, causes him to fall down. In this manner, the leader will open the two answer/trapdoors which he thinks are incorrect.

Albeit the fact that one contestant is standing on the correct answer, if the team leader thinks that answer is to be incorrect and consequently opens the trapdoor, the contestant will fall.

CASH OR SPLASH

In the end, once the leader has opened the two possible answers he believes to be wrong, if the remaining answer is the correct answer and if there is someone from the team standing on that answer, the team earns the chance to play the Final Round with their remaining cash.

If when the leader has opened the two possible answers he believes to be wrong and the remaining answer is the correct answer but there is no one from his team standing on that answer, meaning the other two contestants have already fallen into water, it means that the team has no more money to continue to the final and they are eliminated. (the leader also falls into water as he is also standing on top of a trapdoor)

If when the leader has opened the two possible answers he believes to be wrong and the remaining answer is the incorrect answer, then he and any remaining team member standing on that possible answer will fall into water and they are eliminated.

In the final, the contestants are asked one question with two possible answers. So, one of the answers is right, while the other one is wrong.

The three contestants grab their remaining cash and take their positions on top of the answer/trapdoor which they think is correct.

The other answer is now left for the host. The host takes his position on top of the other answer/trapdoor.

Once the correct answer is revealed, the trapdoors to the wrong answer are opened. If the contestants are standing on the right answer, the host falls into water. The contestants have now won all the cash they have saved so far, which they are holding in their hands.

But if the contestants are standing on the wrong answer, the trapdoors are opened to send them to water for the final time and they are eliminated while the host remains dry.
